WILL IMPEACH GOV. SULZER AND NEWSPAPER COMMENT IS GENERALLY UNFAVORABLE

TO REPLY EARLY NEXT WEEK SAYS SULZER'S FRIEND

Character of Answer Not Intimated in Only Statement Made on Governor's Behalf

REPORT IS TO BE VERY BRIEF

Frawley Committee Will State Bare Facts as Shown by the Investigation

NEW YORK, Aug. 9.—With the Frawley committee having practically completed its investigation and ready to turn over its report of Governor Sulzer's stock investments and his failure to account for all of his campaign contributions, to the legislature with the view of having Sulzer impeached, the governor's closest friends and advisers intimated today that he will make his reply to the charges early next week. The governor it is understood, will issue his expected statement only after conferring with his friends. The Frawley report will be only a bare statement of the evidence brought out here and it will be left for the legislature to take the necessary action looking to impeachment proceedings.

The governor is quoted today as having declared that he expects an attempt to impeach him.

Say He Will Be Ousted

Political leaders here today went even further than a mere declaration that impeachment proceedings are certain. They declared that the Tammany legislature will remove the governor from office witnin a month.

As a reply to this, came statements from the governor's friends in Albany that such an attempt would not be surprising owing to the plans laid by the governor for his direct primary campaign this fall.

The New York newspapers today comment editorially on the Sulzer charges as follows:

Newspapers Severe

World—"The best thing that Governor Sulzer can do is to resign and spare the state of New York further shame and humiliation. No matter what defense he may offer his career is ended."

Times—"The shame and disgrace that William Sulzer has brought upon the state of New York will end his career and put him out and keep him out of public life."

Herald—"There must be no hiding behind technicalities, no equivocation. It will boot the governor nothing to raise the cry of 'Tammany persecution.'"

Sun—"Whatever may be Mr. Sulzer's own policy as to the place and time and methods of meeting the ascertained facts in this dreadful business he would do well to suppress the unintelligent efforts of volunteer defenders."

BROKERS BACKED SULZER

NEW YORK, Aug. 9.—Edward Sutton, broker,s clerk, Friday took the stand in the Frawley committee investigation of the Sulzer campaign fund, swore that the much discussed "Account No. 500" of Fulton & Gray, brokers, was that of Governor Sulzer.

Sutton said that Greay told him so.

By this evidence it was sought to make the charge that Sulzer "played the market," while a candidate for governor of New York.

"BOY EVANGELIST" ARRESTED IN WEST

Rev. L. L. Sanders of North Side Baptist Church Fame Charged with Using Mails to Defraud

MISHANDLED LIBRARY FUNDS

Declares His Innocence and Says Democratic National Committeeman Is to Blame

Rev. L. L. Sanders, until two years ago pastor of the north side Baptist church and known here and elsewhere as the "boy evangelist" is under arrest at Spokane, Wash., charged with using the mails in an attempt to defraud, according to information received in La Crosse today by his former parishoners.

The arrest was made in Spokane but the warrant came from Leola, Wash.

The charges arise out of the alleged mishandling of a library fund at Leola. Sanders says in a letter to La Crosse people "There were no libraries and I sent out appeals by mail for aid, but finally had to close it, owing to a shortage of funds."

Sanders, it is said, charges his arrest to National Democratic Committeeman Millard. He is out on $1,000 bail.

Previous to coming to La Crosse two years ago Rev. Sanders achieved some fame throughout the Mississippi valley for his evangelistic work and owing to his youth became known as the "boy evangelist." He also was interested in church work in Minneapolis.

Sanders maintains that his life was threatened a number of times in the west because of his activity in local option campaign there.

LOVE OF FINERY LEADS TO JAIL

Cassie Street Pleads Guilty to Small Theft and Is Given Thirty Day Sentence

SHE WANTED "PRETTY THINGS"

Girl Friends Had Them but She on Pitiful Salary Couldn't Afford Little Niceties

Cassie Street, aged 22, a domestic, today starts to serve thirty days in the county jail for stealing a piece of finery, dear to the feminine heart but which her meagre salary as a maid of all work would not permit her to buy.

Cassie's is a typical case of the working girl who labors for little or nothing but who has the woman's desire for the little frills and niceties that are only to be procured with cash or by a means unmentionable.

The specific offense with which she was charged this morning was the taking of a necklace, valued at eighteen dollars, the lawful property of Miss Agnes Sirrels. The police say the necklace was worth over twenty dollars but the value was reduced in the complaint, in order to lighten the sentence to be imposed upon the girl.

Cassie was led into court by stalwart policemen and escorted to a chair opposite the district attorney. Throughout proceedings in another case she sat with bowed head, an occasional tear being evidence of the mental ordeal she was undergoing. Cassie's attitude showed her to be unfortunate but not vicious.

When her case was called she was led to the stand near the judge.

"Are you guilty or not guilty of the charge preferred against you?" asked Judge Brindley.

"I took the necklace," sobbed the girl. "I didn't mean to steal it. I like pretty things as well as other girls but I've never had any of them. I was going out that night and thought that—perhaps—if no one saw me—I might wear it. My friends all have necklaces and I just wanted to wear something pretty—just once."

There was a pause in the proceeding, interrupted by one of the policemen who told in the monotonous manner familiar to the "copper" that things had been missed at various places where Cassie had worked. In no instance were the missing articles of great value and in the main they consisted of mere trifles.

"Thirty days in the county jail," was the punishment inflicted upon the girl for wanting to "wear something pretty—just once".

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9.—Amendments placing all trust-made commodities and aluminum products on the free list with the promise that if the bill could be properly amended, he would vote for it, were offered in the senate today by Senator Kenyon of Iowa, progressive republican. The amendment provides for free listing of all commodities manufactured by any corporation which the court has declared a violator of the Sherman anti-trust law.

WM. RUFUS FINCH DROPS DEAD HERE

Pioneer Journalist and Diplomate Stricken at Home of Mrs. Emma Law

HAD BEEN ILL FOR MANY YEARS

Apoplectic Attacks Not Infrequent Since His Return from South America

William Rufus Fich, aged 69 years, pioneer journalist and one time envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to the Republic of Paraguay and Uruguay, dropped dead shortly after 1 o'clock this morning at the home of his mother-in-law, Mrs. Emma Law, Fourth and Cass streets.

Death was due to apoplectic attack to which Mr. Finch has been subject at various times since his return from the South American Republic nearly eight years ago.

According to members of the Law household Mr. Finch last evening was seemingly in the best of spirits and held a long conversation with his brother-in-law, D. S. Law, district attorney.

This morning he arose about 7 o'clock, as was his custom and went into the bathroom. He was found there a few minutes later by members of the family. Dr. Oscar Houck was immediately summoned but despite his efforts death followed shortly.

According to Mrs. Emma Law, mother-in-law, Mr. Finch has had severe attacks for some time the most serious of which occurred about a year ago while at a cottage at Eagle Bluff. At that time death would probably resulted had it not been that Dr. Houck chanced to pass the place in an auto soon after the attack.

Mrs. Finch is at present in Warrens, Wis., where she had gone for a rest. She is in ill health and fears are entertained that she may be unable to stand the shock.

Early Day Journalist

Mr. Finch was a well known journalist, for many years connected with the La Crosse Republican and the Republican and Leader. He was born in Walworth County, Wisconsin, Dec. 14, 1847. His parents were John Reynolds and Lydia Ann Finch. His connection woth La Crosse newspapers dates back to the Republican, before its consolidation with the Leader, first as a compositor and afterwards as editor and publisher.

In politics Mr. Finch is a republican and he has held the following offices: Surveyor of the Port of La Crosse, and envoy extraordinary and minister plenipontetiary of the United States to the republics of Paraguay and Uruguay. His appointment to the latter post was secured with the aid of John C. Spooner, former United States senator from Wisconsin.

Married In 1897

He belonged to the Episcopalian church and to the Free and Accepted Masons and Independent Order of Odd Fellows. On November 2, 1897, Mr. Finch was united in marriage to Miss Lillie M. Law, daughter of the late Hon. David and Emma I. Law, of La Crosse. Mr. Law was one of the prominently identified with the development of the city. He was a leading lumber merchant and was four times elected mayor of the city.

Week Financial

Bank Statement

NEW YORK, Aug. 9.—The weekly bank statement issued today showed the following changes:

Loans increased	$ 5,640,000
Specie increased	1,430,000
Deposits increased	5,657,000
Surplus reserve	25,683,650
Surplus decreased	524,450
Legals decreased	273,000
Circulation decreased .	326,000

NEW YORK, Aug. 9.—On an exceedingly light business, stock exchange prices yielded fractionally, somes shares declining in the neighborhood of one full point. This weakness probably resulted from news that President Wilson had called the senate foreign relations committee to a white house conference over Mexican policy. Over night news from the corn belt report showers in the drought stricken district; still too light, however, to help the situation greatly.

Corn crop failure years stand out so sharply in the industrial history of this country that the serious news of damage to this great staple by the abnormally prolonged western heat and drought, naturally suggests comparisons. With the "failure year" it would hardly be fair to class 1913 as yet. Notwithstanding the agricultural department's showing on an even point reduction in the crop's condition during July, its estimate of the yield as indicated a week ago, is fairly up to the average of the past ten years and very much larger than was indicated at this time in the disastrous corn seasons of 1901 and 1894.

GILLIS HELD UNDER $500 BAIL TODAY

Street Car Man Denies All Knowledge of Actual Shooting of His Former Wife

SHE PLANNED TO KILL BOTH

This Is Claim of Husband to Newspapers Following Appearance in County Court Today

That his wife had attempted to kill him in Denver three years ago, that it is his firm belief that she intended to slay them both the night she spent in his apartments and that he is absolutely innocent of any connection with her shooting in his apartments Wednesday, was the declaration of Henry Gillis to newspaper men today.

He was arrested shortly after the shooting and is being held by the police who maintain that he knows more of the affair than he cares to admit. The charge preferred against him this morning was a statutory one and he is being held under $500 bonds.

"In Denver three years ago," said Gillis today in the first statement he has made to the press since the shooting affair, "she attempted to kill me by shooting. This was just prior to the divorce which she procured.

Met For Last Time

"The only circumstances under which I met her the night preceding the shooting here was her tale that she was leaving for St. Paul on the midnight train. We had supper together. Yes, she did intimate that if we started all over in life we could get along. I had had experience, though, and said neither 'Yes' nor 'No' to her views.

"She insisted on accompanying me to my room and after we were once there she refused to leave. We had a long talk and finally I dropped off to sleep, for I had worked hard that day. I awoke suddenly to find her on the bed, her head towards the foot and her hands under her cravanette.

"She afterwards, I am informed, pulled the gun from a pocket in the cravanette. I am confident that it was her intention to wait until I was asleep, then kill me and herself."

Loved Him Passionately

That his wife did love him, passionately—at times—was Gillis' admission this morning.

In reviewing the talk they had when he left the morning of the shooting this is proven. Gillis claims he started from the room telling her that he must hurry to work, that it was nearly 6 o'clock, his hour for going on duty.

"She clung to me," he said, and there was evidence of emotion in his voice, "and said 'Well Henry, I guess we've spent our last hour together—aren't you sorry?' I didn't answer, it was no use making a painful matter worse and I left. I had only rounded the corner of the house when I heard the shot and rushed back to find her on the floor with blood pouring from her breast. You know the rest."

Efforts are being made today to secure bail for Gillis by his friends.

No Change in Condition

Gordon, Law and Gordon, attorneys, this morning served notice of garnishee proceedings on all banks in an effort to locate any funds Gillis might have. His attorney, F. H. Hartwell insists that he is penniless.

There is no change in the condition of Mrs. Gillis according to reports today. She is still low but doctors believe she will eventually recover.

CRAWFORD'S PLEA ATTACKS OWN PARTY

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9.—A prayer that patriotism replace partisanship and politics in consideration by the senate of the delicate Mexican situation was made of the upper house this afternoon by Senator Crawford of South Dakota, a republican, in an eloquent speech in which he charged his own party with "playing politics." Senator Smith of Michigan had charged that the Maderista junta in Washington was influencing the state department and maintaining a lobby here.

Senator John Sharp Williams, applauding Crawford's attitude.

WILSON OPTIMISTIC BUT OFFICIAL WASHINGTON IS AFRAID OF HUERTA WAR

TURN DOWN MAHON CONFIRM WILCOX

Call of the Senate Raised and Governor's Appointee Defeated by Vote of 18 to 14

ANTI-TRUST BILL IS VETOED

Adjournment Follows Governor's Action in Killing Measure Aproved by Progressive Leaders

MADISON, Wis., Aug. 9.—The Wisconsin state senate this morning refused to confirm the appointment of Thomas Mahon as industrial commissioner by a vote of 18 to 14. Mr. Mahon was Governor McGovern's candidate for the vacancy left by the resignation of Professor Commons. Attempts of the governor's men to name him by a coup were frustrated, and after one of the bitterest political fights of the session, lasting two days the senate this morning finally lifted the call of the house and voted.

Immediately following the rejection of Mahon the governor sent down the name of Fred M. Wilcox for member of the industrial commission, and this appointment the senate unanimously confirmed. The term expires June 30, 1919, the salary is five thousand.

The governor vetoed the anti-trust bill and the veto was sustained by the senate.

Both houses adjourned sine die 12:45 o'clock.

SUNDAY DANGER POINT IN TENSE "MEX" SITUATION

Orders for Army and Navy Ready for President to Push the Button

LIND'S ARRIVAL WAS DELAYED

Positively Stated that Administration Is Holding Up Arrival to Perfect Understanding

(By JOHN EDWIN NEVIN)

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9. — This government is today "treading softly" but likewise "keeping its powder dry," while the speed of the battleship New Hampshire has been reduced so that Special Representative John Lind will not land at Vera Cruz until late today, the American representative in Mexico City is active. Charge d'Affaires O'Shaughnessey has served notice on the Huerta government that its attack on Lind and his mission is an affront to a peaceful sister nation. And he has made it very plain to the Mexican foreign office that, while it can do as it pleases so far as accepting the plan Mr. Lind comes to communicate, it will be held responsible for any affront to the man who comes as an attache of the embassy bearing the unofficial commission of representative of the president of the United States.

Delay Lind's Arrival.

Despite denials by the state department, it can be stated as a fact that Lind's arrival in Mexico has been purposely delayed. The New Hampshire has been in touch with the great Arlington wireless station ever since it cleared from Galveston, and Lind is fully advised by messages sent him in the state department cipher which even the officers of the warship do not understand just what has been transpiring in Mexico City. President Wilson realizes that in physical courage at least Lind is the equal of the man he has been sent to confront and will not be deterred from carrying out the task set by threats of any nature. So Lind, landing in Vera Cruz late today, will proceed to the capital tomorrow and on Monday, using Charge d'Affaires O'Shaughnessey as the medium, will transmit President Wilson's message to Provisional President Huerta.

Think War Imminent.

The great rank and file of officials here today believe the danger of war is very imminent. The army and navy are ready for anything that may happen; the orders for movement of men and ships are already prepared and only require the official signature to become effective.

Boiling in Mexico.

There is a possibility of real trouble in Mexico City tomorrow. The newspapers have bitterly attacked the United States editorially. With Sunday a feast day the idle hordes might try reprisals against Americans and there is grave doubt here that any real attempt at suppression of disorders could be expected from the authorities. All reports agree, however, that only the Americans would be in danger. There is little anti-foreign feeling except against residents of the United States, but against them it is growing increasingly bitter.

Confers with Republicans.

It was stated at the capital today that because the Mexican situation and attending criticism were being agitated by some as an administration matter and not a patriotic one, President Wilson has invited members of the senate foreign relations committee to confer with him at the White house at 8 o'clock tonight.

It was not believed here today that the president's peace plan would be made public before Monday.

MAUDE ADAMS TO OPEN SEASON HERE

Famous Star to Start on Tour from La Crosse and End in New York Christmas

The fact that Maude Adams and her company of forty players are to start their season here and that they have been rehearsing in La Crosse for the last three days is in itself assurance that the production of "Peter Pan" to be at the theater Monday night will be one of the best to be secured.

Miss Adams' assistants have been in La Crosse since Wednesday trimming up the details of the performance—which seems never to grow unpopular—and the star will be here Monday.

The company some time ago started playing in the Northwest and the opening here is really the resumption of Miss Adam's coast to coast trip. The company, following the La Crosse engagement will play the central states returning to New York where "Peter Pan" will be presented during the Christmas holidays.

Following the New York engagement Miss Adams will appear in new plays prepared for her by Mr. Barrie.

MAUDE ADAMS TO SHOW AS BILLED

City Council Grants Theater Permit Over Protest of Health Department Last Night

Maude Adams will appear in "Peter Pan" at the La Crosse Theater Monday night.

This was made possible when the common council last night achieved the unique parliamentary "stunt" of abrogating an ordinance by passing a resolution. The vote was 13 to 7.

A petition of the La Crosse Theater company that they be allowed to open and hold shows without a license until such time as they can secure one—after complying with whatever suggestions the industrial commission may make for improvement of their building—was granted.

The special privilege is in direct conflict with a city ordinance, and was granted in the face of a declaration by J. M. Furstman, health commissioner and member of the theater commission, that the building was unsafe, according to architects, and should be closed until improvements that have been ordered are made. The alleged architect's letter referred to was written a number of years ago.

Friends of the resolution argued that the proprietor of the theater was at a loss to know just what to do. The industrial commission is preparing theater rules and regulations which may conflict with rules laid down by the local commission, and the owner necessarily should have an extension of time until January 1 to comply with the law. In the meantime, it was argued, he should be allowed to hold shows.

Report Not Severe Criticism

A copy of the engineer's report made under direction of the state industrial commission, which arrived today, directs that certain changes be made in the theater, and suggests that still others be made. However, the report carries no intimation of unusual danger, and Manager Wolhuter says that the improvements classed as imperative by the report can be easily made and that he will make them at once. He adds that some of them already have been ordered.

She Knew.

"Darling," he murmured, as soon as they had been seated in the high-priced restaurant, "you can have anything you want on the bill of fare. Shall I read it off to you?" "No," replied the dear girl, "just read it to the waiter."

Mule Starting.

Ancient methods for inducing momentum were as varied as they were usually ineffective—watering the mule to change his mood, putting a carrot on a pole just beyond his reach, causing him to sneeze with pepper, twisting his tail (the latter seldom tried, albeit, owing to the high voltage of his heels), building a fire under him. A modern method is to borrow an automobile, 60 horsepower, hitch a chain to the balky mules with their load and yank them up the street in a reluctant but lively canter.—Jackson News.

Pastime for Youth Only.

A sixty-two-year-old Sydney man is dead as a result of injuries received while trying to "skin the cat," after watching his grandson perform the feat. "Skinning the cat" is one of the most fascinating of youthful pastimes, but let us remember, as we contemplate our gray hairs, that it is a youthful pastime only, and govern ourselves with commensurate dignity.

"It's enough to make a fellow sore," remarked Tommy "Yesterday was pa and ma's wooden wedding and nearly all the neighbors sent shingles."

Seek Appreciation of Others.

Mark Twain once said: "Be good, and you'll be lonesome." Nevertheless, most of us try in our own fashion to achieve that brand of loneliness. It is a characteristic of the average individual to "put the best foot forward." We wish to deserve well of our associates, and the desire to be, or at least appear to be, what others expect us to be is an underlying fact of civilization.

THE TRIBUNE'S Daily Short Story

ZOE'S LAST CALL

By NIXON C. BURTON

Copyright, 1913, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate

Zoe stood at the first entrance waiting. It was hot and stuffy in the theatre. Her velvet dress was warm. She hated even the make-up on her face. Her very eyelashes felt weighted down. She slapped a bit viciously at a strolling fly, and Joe laughed softly at her elbow.

"Keep a 'movin', a 'movin', honey babe!" he hummed under his breath. "What's the trouble, girlie? A bit down?"

"Let me alone," retorted Zoe haughtily.

"Ain't they booking you after this?"

"I should worry!" La Valenza shrugged one shoulder. And she meant it. She could have straight forty weeks of booking in any vaudeville office in the country. Out yonder, past the row of footlights, they were waiting for her with eager eyes and hands swift to respond to every move. But there was Stradford's letter.

It was in her hand, crushed closely. She had meant to throw it away as soon as she reached the stage, but it was still in her hand. And it was a whole year since she had played that dusty, frantic little town out in New Mexico, Tampico.

She had stayed a week there; the started on the second, with the whole town at her feet. It made her thrill now to remember the crowd of adoring reckless, vanquished ranchers and cowboys who had acclaimed her queen. After weeks of split time through the sagebrush lands it was glorious to find a dash of crimson and gold in life's woof.

She had made more money in those ten days than in weeks past. Not her salary alone, but there had been offerings sent to her—left at her dressing room door. Little "pokes" of gold nuggets that had come from far up the side of old Yamagata, the mountain that loomed over toward the California border like some huge shaggy Titan's head, himself deep buried in the earth.

It had all gone east to her mother and Kit. Poor, unfortunate Kit, with her two kiddies and a husband wandering blythely somewhere on the other side of the globe. Nearly every dollar had gone back. She had been glad to send it, but it left her unprepared for what had followed.

She had just finished her dance when the fire broke out. A trampled half smothered cigarette left near the pile of rubbish near the spotlight, and the whole rickety, gilded pile of boards had burst into flames. It had fascinated her—watching the great, licking, yellow tongues leap out over that swaying dark mob of people that had a moment ago been cheering her. And then suddenly a back draft had swept the wave toward her. She had gasped for breath and stumbled blindly. And out of the black and yellow horror of the place he had come to her rescue.

She didn't know him then. Later, during those long days of lonely agony when she lay in the little white room in the sisters' hospital watching the big wasp fight and crawl over the screen she heard them talk of him when they thought she was asleep. He was a Californian—Stanton Stratford.

Eight miles from Tampico was his ranch. He rarely rode in. It had only been chance or fate that had led him that night to the theatre. And yet, out of all the crowd, he had been the only one to thinkof the girl back upon the flaming stage—the only one to go after her and get her out.

One day she opened her eyes and asked if he had been to see her. The sister shook her head.

"The senor could not enter, but he sends to you the flowers, the fruit, the delicacies from the ranchero. His mother has called—"

"His mother!" Zoe had gasped faintly. "How nice of her."

"When you are able, you are to go there to rest and grow strong."

And the queer part was, it had all come true. She had gone up to the wonderful ranchero to be their guest for two weeks. And two things had happened there that had both conspired to send her back to playing split weeks on the old circuits.

"Of course, it's all the way you look at things," dear, placid old Mrs. Stratford had told her. "Stanton says you dance like an angel, but angels don't dance that way, my child, and I hope this may be a sort of a lesson to you from a guiding Providence.

"I am sure it will be, Mrs. Stratford," Zoe had said, with a little half smile.

"Of course, once you're in the life, you never get rid of its glamor; but you very nearly lost your life this time, remember, and it may be the finger of guidance."

"You mean for me to leave the stage?" Zoe wondered if she could know of their talk the night before out in the rose-perfumed garden under the sky of southern stars, when "Stant" Stratford had thrown caution to the winds and demanded the life he had saved. "Do you think it would be right of me to do that if—if I loved somebody?"

"No, I don't child," the old lady had answered, gently. "The lure of it all is in your blood, and it wouldn't be fair to him."

That had been a year back, and she had returned to the forty weeks. Once he had written to tell her of his mother's death. He was alone, and starved for her. Would she come back to him, to the rose garden and the old stars that looked gold in the long hot nights of the southland? She dared not. It was not fair to the man, his mother had told her.

And now, there was his letter in her hand, and she was afraid to open it. When she came off the stage, after the last curtain call, Joe, the manager, grinned at her proudly.

"You pulled eight on 'em, that time, Miss Valenza, and they went crazy on that last call."

"I wish it were my last, Joe," she said, bitterly. "It doesn't seem to taste good to me any more someway."

She heard him call to her again as she turned up the stairs to her dressing room, but she did not answer, and once there she opened the letter from Stratford. It was brief. It merely stated that he was there, in the same town, that night, and would be at the theatre waiting for her. She looked at the postmark. It was stamped right there in that little, lazy, manufacturing Jersey town, and he, Stanton Stratford, was waiting for her downstairs. She closed her eyes for a minute, trying to think clearly, but out of the flood of memory there was only a frantic thankfulness that somehow fate had dealt her the ace of hearts. Joe tapped at her door, and she opened at a crack.

"Gentleman below waiting to see you, Miss Varenza."

"Thank you Joe. Tell him I'll be right down, and—, listen, Joe." She slipped a bill into his hand laughing softly. "Tell them I've been taken fearfully ill, very,very suddenly, Joe. Wire the office I'm down and out for good. I'm goin West tonight, and I won't be back. I'll never, never be back, Joe, understand?"

"Gee,' he said, regretfully, "I wish you'd taken that last call on 'em."

"I'm taking it now, Joe," said Zoe.

The Fairy Invites Susan.

Daddy's Bedtime Story — Susan Receives an Invitation to the Feast of Dolls.

EVELYN had put her doll to bed and she and Jack were waiting for daddy to begin his story.

"Let us hope dolly will have pleasant dreams," said daddy, patting his little girl's head. "Let us hope she will have a nice dream of the land of dolls as all good dolls should have."

Daddy went on. "Once there was a little doll who talked in her sleep and told many wonderful things of her dreams.

"This dolly was named Susan, and once she had been very beautiful.

"And Susan belonged to a little girl named Ruthie. Once Ruthie loved Susan very much, but I'm afraid she loved her too hard, for, after awhile, Susan began to look as if she had been in the wars.

"Susan was sobbing herself to sleep one night when the dream fairy suddenly stood before the doll.

"'Jump right into my carriage,' said the fairy. 'You are invited to attend the feast of dolls.' Susan jumped into the carriage, and away they went.

"The dream fairy stopped at the door of one of these houses and Susan peeped in. Two little girls were sitting on the floor with about 200 dolls around.

"'You see,' said the dream fairy, 'the little girls in this country take very good care of their dolls. You might not think it, but some of those dolls are 200 years old and belonged to the little girls' great-grandmothers' great-grandmother. When they were little girls the old ladies were careful of their dolls so that their little great-grandchildren might have more dolls to entertain at the feast of dolls.

"Susan limped into the house, and the dream fairy, after presenting her to the two dear little girls in silk kimonos and with their puffed hair stuck full of what looked like hatpins, was introduced to all of the 200 dolls, some of whom were dressed like court ladies and gentlemen; some of them like farmers and sailors and soldiers, and some of them just like plain little boy and girl dolls.

"And they all asked Susan her age. If you wish to be polite in Japan, you must ask the person you are talking to how old he or she is, so the dolls, of course, asked Susan. And they looked very much surprised when she told them she was not quite a year old.

"One old doll of 200 did not think Susan was telling the truth.

"'Go home, you naughty creature!' exclaimed the doll. 'Why, I'm 200 if I'm a day, and you look older than I do. It's wicked to tell fibs!'

"And Susan must have gone, for next morning, Ruthie found her sleeping, as usual, in her little bed."

BY WHAT STANDARDS SHALL WE MEASURE

The writings of Mark Sullivan, Collier's political soothsayer, are directed with trenchant power to the support of the Wilson tariff; perhaps no other has given more able assistance in lining up and holding the democratic senators for the measure.

But Mr. Sullivan labors under no delusions as to the character of the bill that he champions, for in the current issue he says:

"It must be admitted freely, even by the most partisan democrats when they are candid, that the present tariff bill is far from a perfect thing. It must also be admitted that there is no consistent principle running through it—neither free trade, nor tariff for revenue, nor protection."

This is a point that President Wilson and his party supporters should not forget:

Many progressives of all parties are supporting the Wilson-Underwood bill as preferable to the obnoxious Payne-Aldrich bill, but they do not thereby concede that the bill is perfect, or that it is desirable excepting by contrast. In other words, many of them prefer the Wilson to the Aldrich horn of the dilemma.

The Wilson bill has stood up in debate because it profits by comparison with the Aldrich law. In many particulars it will suffer by comparison with the La Follette bill, to be submitted. The real tariff debate is still to come.

AND NOW ROMANCE BECOMES REALITY

In Salt Lake City a clever youth has perfected a wireless device that will send enough electricity hurtling through the air to explode nitroglycerine placed at a distance and that will work like destructive wonders without danger to the operator. The youth is now in jail because he sought to get rich by the blackmail method instead of through legitimate returns from his discovery.

Years ago, when the wireless first astonished the world, authors with their imaginations working at white heat put into books just such destructive machines as that which has landed the Salt Lake young man in jail. Heroes safe on shore would destroy whole fleets of hostile battleships; cranks would terrorize millions of persons; men would have powers of annihilation hitherto credited only to the Almighty. These imaginings are gradually coming into realization. Forces unknown a quarter of a century ago are being developed constantly and being made part of everyday life. In every direction the impossible has been made possible. It seems that no sooner is something new suggested than it is worked out.

Jules Verne imagined the submarine and now we have whole fleets of them. He and the author of the Frank Reade thrillers suggested self-propelling houses, iron horses and mechanical elephants—and behold we have automobiles that do stunts even more remarkable than the imagined feats of a few years ago. No dreamer of the study can get ahead of the practical inventor of the shop and the laboratory.

The ethereal imaginings of the authors of thrillers are having their good results. They are setting a pace for the inventors as well as furnishing them with ideas. Romancing is leading to accomplishment and the farther the authors romance, the faster the practical world progresses, it seems.

WHAT D'YOU WANT TO TALK ABOUT IT FOR

What joy there must have been for the socialists in reading in the Saturday Evening Post that paper's recent editorial on land tenure in England."

"A very notable British subject died recently," says The Post, "and the London newspapers, especially those of Conservative tendencies, recounted his merits and achievements at much length. Twice, it appears, he displayed intellectual gifts of a surpassing order—in 1886 by voting against Gladstone's Home Rule Bill, and some eight or nine years ago by predicting that internal combustion engines would be used in ships. For the rest he was a well-behaved, industrious gentleman, who sat in the House of Commons several years as a matter of course and took a keen interest in yachting. A good man undoubtedly, and a very great one, because he happened to be born the son of a duke and by inheritance was the largest land owner in England. It is calculated that at his demise he held one million five hundred thousand acres of the earth's arable surface, which duly descend to the new duke and his heirs and assigns forever.

"A true abstract of title to that million and a half acres would be one of the most interesting documents imaginable. It would show how in dim pre-Conquest times such and such thanes began to assert a qualified private right to it; to what muscular captains William parceled it out; what monarchs gave a wood here and a meadow there to male and female favorites; how Sir This and Baron That bequeathed parts of it to the church, for charity and the repose of their souls; how the Tudors took it away from the church and bestowed it upon their friends; how for a full thousand years whim, chance and custom have handed it over to everybody—except the laborious persons who actually tilled it."

The evil discussed by The Post is at the bottom of England's poverty problem. But why discuss it, if there is no remedy? Yet The Post discusses it, and if there IS a remedy it is socialistic.

To facilitate voting it has been suggested that the national house of representatives vote by means of a new electrical device. Fine. We also suggest that they speak by telegraphic code.

Summer Girls

The Duc de Richelieu, seated on an Atlantic City pier, waved his hand with a gesture of admiration toward the glitering beach.

"What a beautiful sight!" he cried. "But it would not be half so beautiful save for your summer girl, in her crisp white gown or in her blue bathing dress is superb.

"How fascinating she is! How irresistible! I heard a tale about her last night that I can well believe.

"On a seaward-fronting terrace, between dances, a young man said to a lovely summer girl:

"Now, tell me the truth, weren't you engaged to Truxton King last month?"

"The summer girl knitted her beautiful brow in thought. Then, with a little yawn, she said:

"'Oh, what's he like? I'm no good at remembering names.'"

Quips and Cranks and Wanton Wiles

Home-Made Goods

"Every time you come to town
And start to throw your money aroun'
Say, Homemade goods are the goods for me,
Because they spell 'prosperity.'

"A dollar you send to the eastern store
Says, "Goo-bye Bill, forevermore!
But the dollar you spend with the homemade sound
Keeps a-comin' and a-comin' and a-comin' 'round.

"The people around are getting wise
To the way to beat the catalog guys,
Who keep what they get and never come 'round
With enough of the coin to buy a hound.

"We love our town and we love our state,
And here's where we ought to cooperate,
If you want health, wealth and a groaning table,
Always as the clerk for the 'homemade' label."

The Roving Irish

An Indianapolis lawyer with a friend, motored down to Greenfield, Ind., the birthplace of James Whitcomb Riley, the Hoosier poet. They had dinner at the hotel, and thought they would like to see the house where Riley lived. So they asked the hotel man:

"Where is the Riley house?"

"I don't know any hotel by that name," he replied; "though there may be some such boarding house here."

"I mean the James Whitcomb Riley house," said the lawyer, thinking his host had misunderstood.

"I don't know him; you may be able to find his name in the city directory."

"I guess he's moved," said the lawyer as he aimlessly thumbed the directory.

"Probably," the hotel keeper commented. "Some of the Irish don't stay long in a place!"—Saturday Evening Post.

It Pleased Her

Admiral Peary, fresh from his European triumph, was talking about the conquest of Mount McKinley.

"Doc Cook will be pleased about it," said a Brooklynite.

"Yes," said the admiral. "Cook will be about as well pleased as the lady who said, on the seashore hotel piazza:

"'I shall never marry.'

"To this a group of pretty summer girls answered in chorus:

"'Oh don't say that! Women even older than you have had proposals.'"

Read His Mind

A negro, having won a dollar at a crap game, decided to spend it on having his fortune told. The fortune teller led him into a gloomy room with dirty hangings and misty red lights. She took his palm, traced it with a dollar, spread out her cards, then said:

"You are very fond of music; you like chicken; you have won money at craps, and you have been in jail."

The negro looked at her with bulging eyes and finally ejaculated:

"Mah goodness, lady; why, you jest read mah inmost thoughts!"

Didn't Understand Her

ECZEMA ITCHED TERRIBLY ON HANDS

White Little Spots. Scratching Made Them Worse. Cuticura Soap and Ointment Cured.

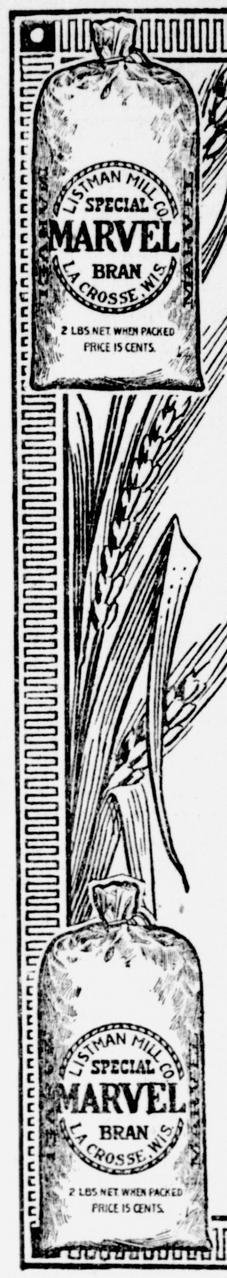

1261 Marion Place, Chicago, Ill. — "I had eczema for four or five years. One day I came into the house and saw some white little spots coming out on my hands. A week later I saw that the spots began opening and in their places came deep holes. Later it took the form of some red little spots. Those spots itched me terribly and every night when I was asleep I always used to scratch and make the spots worse and made some new spots. The trouble caused loss of sleep. My hands cost my father a fortune.

"I used remedies for three and one-half years but they made me worse. I used ———, which helped a little bit, but in a day or two it got worse; also ———. Later on I heard of Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I used Cuticura Soap and Ointment two times a day, in the morning and at night before going to sleep. Cuticura Soap and Ointment afforded relief in one or two weeks, and it only took two months before the cure was complete." (Signed) Clement Levinson, Nov. 22, 1912.

Although the Cuticura Soap and Ointment are most successful in the treatment of affections of the skin, scalp, hair and hands, they are also most valuable for everyday use in the toilet, bath and nursery, because they promote and maintain the health of the skin and hair from infancy to age. Sold everywhere. Liberal sample of each mailed free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address post-card "Cuticura, Dept. T, Boston."

Men who shave and shampoo with Cuticura Soap will find it best for skin and scalp.

A MYSTERY STORY OF NEW YORK

By Will Irwin

"Lady is gone!" said Laughing-Eyes. "Pretty lady! Another spirit—oh—I see pretty things! They shine—oh—go away. Come back! No, he will not stay," she paused here.

And now Miss Estrilla spoke again, and in such a tone that Rosalie knew she might hurry to her climax.

"Can't you bring him back, Laughing-Eyes?" she said. "Oh, please bring him back. Tell him, oh, tell him that I am not angry!" A dry sob shook the silence of the room.

"No. He is afraid. And he is weak in spirit!" babbled Laughing-Eyes. "Maybe he will come again—maybe." And Laughing-Eyes giggled and babbled of Miguel and Victoria and a dozen spirits impertinent to Miss Estrilla. Yet always in her babblings she seemed to hold the atmosphere of truth; she referred casually and in remote ways to a dozen facts about Miss Estrilla's family and her past. Presently her voice died away; and Rosalie lay silent and impassive, waiting for Miss Estrilla to wake her.

CHAPTER XV.
John Talks.

In the following seance—held the next afternoon at the special and plaintive request of Miss Estrilla—Rosalie Le Grange reached at last the very kernel of the matter.

She brought "John."

She had prepared, by a special and subsidiary line of play, for this vital move. She had been cultivating Constance Hanska. With arts all her own, Rosalie broke through the reserves of that distressed widow. From discussion of the murder, Rosalie led her on to details of her married life. From that, she lured Constance into deeper confidence, which involved the personal peculiarities of the late Captain Hanska, such as his way of speaking, the quality of his voice, and his methods with women. When Rosalie settled down to the fifth seance, she had in her mind a picture of John H. Hanska which was good enough for any of her purposes.

The preliminaries were over; Laughing-Eyes had gone her babbling way back to the land of the spirits; Doctor Carver held control.

"A spirit has been trying to communicate, but he is a new spirit and not yet strong. He says that the lady's sickness is not of the body. It is of the mind. He also is not happy yet. John was his name on the flesh-plane—it is hard—we over here must make an effort—it is a strain on us as on the medium—I get an 'H.'" In the ensuing silence, Miss Estrilla gave one hard sob.

The silence lasted for half a minute. Rosalie strained and struggled as though a tumult were going on within. Then came a man's voice, higher and softer than that of Doctor Carver.

"I am John, Margaret. I can not stay long. I am not strong—they tell us over here—that we must forgive—even as we are forgiven. But—I will come again—"

"Oh, John—I am trying to forgive—oh, do you understand—wait—" gasped Miss Estrilla.

But John spoke no more.

"He may grow stronger after a time," said the voice of Doctor Carver, "if this poor earth vessel through which we speak does not break." So he finished the pertinent part of that session.

The seances were coming every day now. Miss Estrilla wished it; and Rosalie granted her request with an appearance of indulgent reluctance. The next day, John intruded again. This time, it appeared, he had grown strong enough to speak consecutively.

"I have not full power yet. But it is coming. I grow stronger. But the shock in my breast—I feel it." That was something of a venture. Rosalie waited to see what reply it would draw.

The reply came, quick and puzzling:

"Did that come first?"

Rosalie, thinking like lightning, felt herself for the moment at her wits' ends. Upon the answer to that cryptic question question everything might depend. It were best, she concluded, to humor Miss Estrilla; to give her what she wanted, but to make the wording vague. She let her body heave, as though John were retaining his control with difficulty.

"No," said the voice, "that was not first. It had come already. But, somehow—I knew."

"Oh, thank God!" cried Miss Estrilla.

John departed on this. Doctor Carver and Laughing-Eyes spread clouds of mist, intellectual but rosy. They went; Rosalie entered that apparent sleep with which she concluded her "trances." As she lay there, with nothing to do but think, this new perplexity revolved itself in her mind: What meant that sudden question—"Did that come first?" The trail was leading into wildernesses of which she had never dreamed.

Rosalie held three more seances with Miss Estrilla before she reached the final vital one to which all her diplomacies had been leading. Let me omit the lumber and packing, as yawns, mumblings, long passages of sleep, solemn orations of Doctor Carver, babblings of Laughing-Eyes, revelations concerning the family life of Miguel and Victoria. Let me but report those little dialogues between John in the spirit, and Miss Estrilla (or Margarita Perez) in the flesh, to which this hocus-pocus was only an approach.

* * *

John is speaking through the lips of Rosalie Le Grange, and Miss Estrilla is answering.

"I am stronger now. The flesh influence is not yet gone from me. There was much on my soul. I find it hard to forgive. And I know I must—little lady." Rosalie had learned from Constance that "little lady" was Captain Hanska's pet name for woman in tender relations and she let it out as a venture.

"Oh, John! But consider how much I have to forgive. Ah, did you ever love me? You never answered my letters."

"I loved you perhaps too much. Over here, we can not lie. I was carried away—and I was married—"

"Yes. Every one knows that now. You deceived me. It is harder for me to forgive that than the other thing."

"Yes—but I loved you too much—to risk telling you."

"Was that why you kept the jewels, then?" A hard attack came into Miss Estrilla's tone. It was more than a question; there was irony in it. Rosalie thought rapidly. That diamond-buckle on the stair-case—'the jewels'—here was a startling new correlation of facts. She must venture no further; she must have time to imagine and to plan.

"I can not tell you now," said the voice of John. "I am—growing weak—I sinned—"

"Oh, he's gone away!" broke in the voice of Laughing-Eyes.

The M. D. Knew His Business

Down in Tennessee there was once a doctor, who was called in to attend an old Confederate soldier who was sick. The doctor attended the patient for some days and administered numerous restoratives, but none seemed to have the desired effect and the patient declined all the while, finally lapsing into a rigid, unconscious condition and apparently death was at hand. The doctor did many things to revive him, but without success. Now, it happened that the patient was one of that numerous tribe who love their drink, but, being very poor, he was not able to supply himself with the "cup that cheers." The doctor, remembering the old fellow's weakness for spirits frumenti, sent for a bottle of liquor. As he entered the room, seeing the patient was still in this rigid, unconscious condition stated to the patient's wife, a good, religious old woman, that he had exhausted every other remedy in his efforts to stimulate and revive the old man, and he had decided to give him a good, stiff drink of liquor. The wife thereupon protested and begged the doctor not to give her husband the "vile stuff," saying, "I had rather he would die and go home to glory without it than for his appetite for the villainous stuff to be revived."

The doctor replied to the wife: "Very well, if you object, I'll not give it to him."

Then for the first time in several days, the old man turned slowly on his side, raised up on his elbow and said:

"Puss (that was his wife's name) I reckon the doctor knows his business, don't he?"—

The Black Hand Again

Mrs. Collins found the following Blackhand letter pined to her door one morning:

"Deer Miss Collins—Onless you put a jar of jam, a hunk of chokolit cake, a apple pie an' a bag of candy down by the old well, we will steel your littel boy and keep him, onless you pay us a milyon dollars.

"The Blackhand."

The letter has been handed to the police and the criminals will soon be brought to justice. To date, Mrs. Collins' little boy has been the only one seen in the vicinity of the old well.—Judge.

ENLARGED VEINS

The dilatation or stretching of the walls of the veins in certain localities results in such great expansion or enlargement that in places the veins stand out under the skin, forming knots which vary in size, and cause considerable pain, particularly where the veins affected are the ones surrounding vital parts. There is no other disease of the veins having such a constant and damaging effect on the vitality, such disturbing influence on the nervous system, such devitalizing tendencies.

Every man who has enlarged veins knows that he is afflicted, but sometimes he does not realize that the disease will sap up his vitality and bring on nervous decline. Every sufferer knows in his own heart whether his trouble has developed through overindulgence, or is the result of overwork, injury or other cause; but not many take into consideration that the disease exerts a harmful effect on the mind, because the mental health is necessarily founded on physical health.

Many cases pronounced incurable except by operation will yield to medical treatment. Why neglect that dragging, uneasy sensation and peculiar knotty feeling resembling worms, until your mental and physical condition is such that you are unfit for your work or social duties?

Sufferers from this trouble are offered a means of escape. Why not embrace the opportunity while your case is tractable? Dr. Turbin's powerful treatment brings relief, and the patient feels and knows from the start that he is obtaining benefits. Gradually the vital organs and the entire system take on new life and the gain in strength is steady as the medicines are absorbed, until the thoroughness of the treatment bears fruit in lasting cure.

BIG FACTORY FOR NORTH LA CROSSE

J. F. Saltz Has Deal On to Bring Plant Employing 100 Men to City; Want Site Here

An Illinois manufacturing concern, employing 100 men is seeking a site on the north side and has in view the old Sawyer and Austin mill land at the head of Caledonia street.

Negotiations for the purchase of the site by the indutry are being carried on with J. F. Saltz, a local real estate man, and it is believed that a deal for the purchase of the site will be entered into within a short time.

"It is true," said Mr. Saltz this morning, "that there is a big Illinois company coming to La Crosse, if they can procure a suitable site. It is also true that they are negotiating for the purchase of the Sawyer and Austin Mill company place.

"I have sent a representative to the Illinois city to confer with the company heads and a deal will be closed soon."

Important Adjuncts to Life.

If the telescope is the greatest of all eyes, the microscope is the most useful of all eyes. With the microscope and the telescope we look in opposite directions. The one shows us the illimitable universe, whereby the imagination is excited to conceptions of infinity, but the other reveals the infinitely small—the microbes, the germs, the cells. With the telescope we elevate the mind; with the microscope we combat the enemies of life. Both are the handmaids of science and civilization.

Important Correction.

"I wish to say to my congregation," said the minister, "that the pulpit is not responsible for the error of the printer on the tickets for the concert in the Sunday school room. The concert is for the benefit of the Arch fund, not the Arch Fiend. We will now sing hymn six, 'To err is human, to forgive divine.'"

Evidently Had Marrying Mania.

Probably the world's marrying record for men was created by George Witzoff, the notorious bigamist, whose marriages have variously been estimated at from 50 to 500. It has been said, however, that 100 is nearer the real mark. This man caused a great stir a few years ago, and it was reported that in the space of a single week he went through marriage ceremonies with seven different women.

SPIRITUAL SUNSHINE.

The harvest of grains and fruits is not more regular or abundant than the yield of human affections, sympathies, fellowships, but here also there are differences of seasons and of soils. SPOTLIGHTS

PETER PAN MONDAY

Considerable interest is being manifested in the coming of Maude Adams in Barrie's play, "Peter Pan" at the La Crosse Theater Monday night, Aug. 11. This has been shown by the number of inquiries at the theater and the vast number of mail orders for seats which have been received by the management. The mail order list from out of town promises to be the heaviest that the theater has ever known. That there should be so much interest displayed in the coming of Miss Adams is not without reason for the young woman is recognized as the most popular actresses on the American stage. She has probably through her personality and the things that she has accomplished done more for the betterment of the stage in this country than any other player now before the public. In presenting "Peter Pan" the actress brings back to life one of the best plays that the stage has had in years. It is one which has had tremendous vogue and which has been eulogized in England and in this country as a classic that will live forever, live forever. While "Peter Pan" is a fairy play and concerns children it was written by Barrie for grownups and it has never failed in making the man and woman who witness it to live again in the days of their childhood, when everything was real, when the boy dreamt of killing Indians or of some day being an engineer, and the little girl of being rescued by some galient from an impending danger. The play is elaborately staged and capitally acted by a strong company.

GOOD SUNDAY SHOW

No modern writer of fiction can claim as many readers as Harold Bell Wright, his books having sold into the millions. The most popular of the Wright novels, 'The Shepherd of the Hills" has been made into a play by Mr. Wright, with the assistance of Elsbery W. Reynolds. The first presentation of "The Shepherd of the Hills" in this city will be given at the La Crosse Theater commencing Sunday, matinee and night, Aug. 17.

The story has been so widely read that a resume of it is practically unnecessary. It is a story of the Ozark mountains and of a people that live wholesome, clean lives, who do big things in a matter-of-fact manner. It is a play that makes its auditor a better man or woman for having seen it.

The regular monthly meeting of the council occurred Tuesday evening. The usual grist of bills were ordered paid and other routine business ground out. A resolution was passed directing the Water commission to do the work.

PEACE AGAIN, MAYBE

LONDON, Aug. 9.—The ambassadors yesterday met in consultation at the foreign office with Sir Edward Grey, for the purpose of discussing the Adrianople situation. Now that another peace agreement has been reached in the Balkans, it is believed al that remains to be done is to make Turkey respect the treaty of London and retire behind the Enos Midia frontier. Bulgaria has formally notified the powers that she regards it as up to the powers to put the Ottoman out of Adrianople.

WILD WEST SHOW INVADES THE CITY

101 Ranch Wild West Show Arrives Here Early This Morning for Big Time

The streets of La Crosse were turned over this morning to Miller Brothers and Arlington's 101 Ranch Wild west show today. The "big top" aggregation arrived here at an early hour, and before the city was fairly awake, had transformed the Market street circus grounds into a veritable tented city.

A good portion of the interested public were to be seen early in the morning down in the railroad yards watching the maneuvers of unloading. A large crowd also congregated at the circus grounds. Among those persons were to be seen not only "Young America," but young America's father and his mother and sisters and the whole family, watching the preparations for the big "free show" on the street.

La Crosse has seen circuses, animal shows and wild west entertainments, but it was evidenced by the magnitude of the "101" show that the town was going to receive a jolt. The show is the largest and most distinct of its kind on the road, carrying 500 people and five trains.

La Crosse today had a chance to see the finest lot of horses possibly ever shown here. Miller Brothers make horses a feature of their show, in number and breed. They range in specie from the little wiry mustang of the home ranch in Wyoming, to the big white Arabian steed of high value. Their horses are given care at all times, that keep their coats in the finest of condition.

No delay interfered with the getting out of the parade which started from the grounds on time and passed the down town streets before 11 o'clock. It was beautiful and brilliant, quite the most effective display ever shown here on the streets.

Joseph C. Miller, president of the show, led the parade on his favorite horse, "Ben Hur" sitting astride a silver mounted saddle valued at $5,000.

The line that followed contained all the famous cow boys and cow girls and Indians of the show. Interesperced through the parade were suggestions of the old pioneer days. The Old Wells Sargo stage coach with "Rocky Mountain Hank" in the seat, long haired and cadaverous, an actual relic of the old stage coach days driving a string of small ponies thrilled the audiences. The parade figured over a mile in length.

The first performance takes place this afternoon, and a second show tonight. Judging from the street exhibition Miller Brothers and Arlington's 101 Ranch Wild West is going to exceed any show seen here for some years.

FISHING PROPER ON WALTON'S BIRTHDAY

Today Is the Anniversary of the Patron Saint of Fishermen; Published Book in 1593

Staid business men, the store keeper and the ordinary citizen today had a legitimate reason to close up their establishments, give the key to the over-worked office boy and hiding himself by some shady nook, there settle himself down to luring the elusive trout, or the sportive bass or other members of the finny tribe.

Today, August 9, is the anniversary of Isaac Walton, who while he never fished in the vicinity of La Crosse, spent many a happy hour fishing in his favorite stream, the Lea, which has its course above the Ware, in Herfordshire and goes angling through the country to the northwest of London, where it falls into the Thames a little above Blackwell.

Izaak Walton, the uncanonized patron of all anglers, was born Aug. 9, 1593, ovre three hundred years ago. The "Compleat Angler," or or Contemplative Man's Recreation, was one of the biggest strikes Walton ever made, when he published this book in 1653. From time to time Walton added to this his beloved book.

COUNCIL WARS OVER VIADUCT

Committee of Whole Report Adopted After Mahoney Is Beaten in a Hard Fight

CITY IS TO BE REASSESSED

Inaccuracies in Assessment Rolls Claim Aldermen; Bitter Personalities Feature Session

The council last night adopted the report of the committee of the whole instructing the city attorney to appear before the railroad commission at its hearing here August 11 and urge the rebuilding the Rose street viaduct, according to a contract entered into by the city and C., M. & St. P. railway in 1883, until the entire viaduct question can be permanently settled.

This was not accomplished until after a strenuous filibuster engineered by Alderman Paul W. Mahoney to "get aldermen on record" on the matter but which other members of the council today are claiming was a foxy move to put the city in a hole with the railroad commission of Wisconsin.

Immediately following the reading of the committee of the whole, report by Alderman Joseph Bartl, Mr. Mahoney offered a substitute report ordering the city attorney to urge the carrying out of the rate commission's original order for a viaduct at Rose street with street car tracks there. The resolution was elaborately prefaced with "whereas's" which intimated that the city may have been lax in the matter, that the order of the commission was just, equitable and satisfactory, with the exception of apportionment of the cost. Following debate the substitute was killed, 13 to 7.

Mahoney was on his feet in a minute with a resolution, an exact duplicate of the defeated measure with the exception of the resolution which said the city attorney should fight for a viaduct at Mill street. "I merely offer this to get the aldermen on record and find where they stand," announced Mahoney. Aldermen scented danger in adopting the "whereas's", however, and a tie vote resulted. Mayor Sorensen cast the vote breaking the tie and beating the resolution.

Replete With Sensations

Last night's meeting of the council was replete with sensations and embarrassments caused chiefly by the determination of Alderman Mahoney to know the why's and wherefore's of various details of the city's business.

The balloon started skyward when the north sider demanded to know why a report of the board of public works, due to be read at the June meeting had been held up until August. The report dealt with paving contracts and under the law, Mahoney maintained, had not been properly advertised and consequently the contracts could not be let.

Alderman Burt Smith took exception to Mahoney's remarks in regard to the report and his argument was answered by Mahoney with a volley of personalities quite interesting but "too hot to handle."

Alderman Mahoney again started a guessing contest when he demanded to know why the board of public works has seen fit to issue sewer certificates for north side work before the bonds had been advertised or sold. An embarrased silence in the council chamber was finally broken by an attempt on the part of George Falk, of the board of public works, to explain, but Mr. Falk was unable to satisfy Alderman Mahoney's thirst for knowledge.

City to be Reassessed

The council last night ordered the reassessment of the city. This step was taken, it is said, because the board of review has found inaccuracies in the assessment rolls which make the step imperative. It was pointed out that the taxes have been figured on an assessment taken years ago and in many instances are unjust to property owners.

To Paint Wagon Bridge

The board of public works was ordered to enter into a contract with Mrs. G. Anderson of the Little Shop for the repainting of the wagon bridge. Cleaning, scraping and painting, the city to furnish the material, will be done for $972. The A. & C. Johnson company was the only other bidder. They wanted $1200 for the work.

The traffic "cop" is to stay at the corner of Fourth and Main streets. A request to do away with the new system was refused by the committee on police and the council backed them up despite the arguments of Mr. Mahoney that he was an unnecessary and an expensive luxury.

No Chain Gang Here

The chain gang for tramps will not be established here, owing to the lateness of the "hobo" season and the additional expense involved.

Resolutions were adopted providing for the oiling of several blocks of city streets.

The health department was ordered to enter into a contract with Dr. Swarthout for a renewal of the lease on the public burial ground on the north side at a cost not to exceed $100 per year.

Residents on Green Bay street are to get the water. Seven hundred and fifty dollars was appropriated for an extension from Ninth street to West Avenue.

The report of the special committee which attended the convention of the Wisconsin League of Municipalities was accepted and placed on file. The committee maintained in the report that the meet was one of the most enjoyable and instructive of any ever held in Wisconsin.

Following recommendations made at the convention by Attorney General Walter C. Owen it is probable that an ordinance will be drafted here reducing the transient merchant or peddlers' license. This same step will be taken in other state cities upon the attorney general's advice. He claims the present fee of $25.00 per day is excessive.

L. P. Benezet, superintendent of schools, put in a claim against the city for damage to certain hay lands. The claim was referred.

The application of Irvine Jones for a saloon license at 123 South Second street, was characterized by Alderman Roellig as a subterfuge on the part of the Law hotel proprietors to get a license.

The council declined to grant the permit but referred the application to the excise committee.

The application is made in spite of the fact that the number of licenses already granted is in excess of the legal limit specified by the Baker law.

A Diplomatic System.

"To what, sir," we asked a middle aged, happily married man recently, "do you attribute the success you have made of your married life?"

"'Tis a bit of elementary wisdom, my son," he replied. "When my wife is in the wrong I agree with her, and all is well. When she is in the right I argue against her. She emerges triumphantly, proves me foolish, feels good all day—and again all is well. Learn this, my son, ere you marry."—Cleveland Leader.

Historic Crimes and Mysteries

By WALT MASON

The Scholar and the Skull.

SARAH MAXWELL'S only claim to a deathless renown rests upon the fact that a great man brought her to her doom, and so the details of her life story are meagre, but a few facts have survived.

At the beginning of the seventeenth century she was a maid servant in the home of a wealthy citizen of Huntingdonshire. She was unusually good looking, and had some education—a rare thing for a handmaiden in those days—and was generally above her station. In the employ of the same family there was a middle aged man named Armstrong. He was rather uncouth, with a huge shock of sorfel hair, and little more is known of him, except that he was a great favorite with his master. Armstrong saved his money a penny at a time and as he approached the sere and yellow leaf he found he had money enough to buy an inn that was for sale. He and Sarah were married, and took possession of the inn.

It is reasonable to suppose that the influence of the master was brought to bear to effect this marriage of the servants, for it doesn't seem probable that Sarah would have chosen as her husband a loutish man more than twice her age. However that may be, the two settled down in their caravansary, and Sarah was greatly respected and admired. Many young men made eyes at the handsome wife, but they had to keep their distance. Then one morning Mrs. Armstrong calmly informed the neighbors that her husband had died during the night. He had drunk himself into a stupor before retiring, she said, and died from the effects of his debauch. That seemed strange to some of the neighbors, for

"It's a curious skull; see how a huge nail has been driven into it."

Armstrong was known as an unusually temperate man. There, doubtless, was some malicious gossip, but the husband was buried in the crowded churchyard. Before he had been there, among the rude forefathers of the hamlet, for twenty-four hours, the widow had married a young man named Maxwell. Then there was more talk—enough to fasten the events in the memories of the inhabitants, for future use.

Sarah and her new husband conducted the inn for many years. Sarah became the mother of several admirable children, and was in every way an excellent matron. As she waxed older she became devout and was free with precept and admonition. Every Sunday she might have been seen in the church, and the eloquence of the new preacher often moved her to tears. His eyes often were upon her as he talked, for a good listener is a great help to a clergyman, and this motherly woman seemed so intelligent and appreciative that it was a pleasure to talk at her.

The new preacher was Dr. John Donne, one of the truly great men of his time. He had accepted a "living" in Huntingdonshire and occasionally preached there, although most of his time was spent in London. He was a great preacher, and the most beautiful man in England. Beautiful is the word; the old writers say he had the face of an angel. Izaak Walton wrote an enthusiastic tribute to him, saying that "he carried his hearers to heaven in a holy rapture; he pictured vice so that we hated it, and virtue so that we loved it."

As a poet he was equally great, and many learned men of the period held that he was without a peer. Ben Jonson said he was "the first poet in the world in some things, but he will perish for not being understood," which prophecy came true. Dryden said he was the greatest wit of the nation. He was an impulsive man, full of fantastic moods and fancies. Some of his poetry was as light as thistledown, and some was profound. Now it was voluptuous, and again morbid.

He wrote much about the mystery of death, and that subject interested him to such a degree that he haunted graveyards. One day he stood in the graveyard surrounding his church and watched the weary sexton at work. It was an old, old cemetery, and every time a grave was dug bones were thrown up. Poor people buried there could not count upon undisturbed repose. In a few years at most they would have to make way for others. Presently, as the sexton wielded his shovel, he threw out a skull, and the preacher picked it up, and doubtless moralized upon the vanity of human life. As he turned it around in his hands, his fingers encountered a projection. It was the head of a nail. Examination showed that the nail had been driven through the skull, and it still projected into the interior cavity two or three inches.

The reverend doctor realized at once that a horrid crime had been committed. He questioned the sexton as to whose grave had been disturbed, but the sexton didn't know. He had officiated only a few years. Perhaps his predecessor might remember. The predecessor was a white and wintry gaffer who lived at some distance. Donne hunted him up, and took him to the graveyard. The old man's wits were feeble, but his memory for all things connected with dead men's bones was accurate. He at once announced that the grave had been occupied by Armstrong, the innkeeper.

Dr. Donne inquired about the village concerning the death of Armstrong, and the oldest inhabitants recalled the wife's queer story, and her remarkable haste to get married again. There was reason for suspicion, at least; but the good doctor found it almost impossible to believe that the fine devout woman who listened to his sermons so closely could be guilty of an atrocious crime. If ever a calm, untroubled face spoke of a clear conscience, the face belonged to that woman.

But he felt it his duty to set his doubts at rest. If she was guilty, the law must have its dues; if innocent, she should be vindicated. So one day he called at the inn with a small package in his hand. The good wife was overwhelmed with pleasure and pride. She took him into the best room, and while her back was turned he opened his parcel and placed the skull upon a table. When she turned around she saw it and her face became ghastly.

"It's a curious skull," said Donne, taking it up; "see how a huge nail has been driven into it." And he looked into her eyes as though he would read her soul. She sank to a seat weeping and moaning, and then, while the gentle pastor held her hands she told how she slew her husband.

She was convicted and sentenced to death, and during the brief interval between her trial and execution the man who had been her Nemesis proved her comforter and consoler. He was with her almost constantly through those trying hours, and to such good effect that she went out of the world hopefully, with a smile on her lips.

RUPP INTERRUPTS WIFE TO SORROW

NEW YORK, Aug. 9.—Lawrence Rupp, whose wife had him arrested Thursday night because he interrupted her suffrage speech, was found guilty of disturbing the peace by Police Magistrate McGuire yesterday. Sentence suspended upon his promise not to do it again.

"I cooked my husband's dinner," Mrs. Rupp told the magistrate, "and I left it on the table and went out to speak. About 9 o'clock along came Mr. Rupp. He interrupted me right in the midst of my most telling argument.

"'Here's a woman,' he said, 'who won't cook my supper and won't put my children to bed because she is talking for women's votes. What do you think of that kind of a woman?'

"When he said that I just had to have him arrested."

Story of the Development of the Fine Modern Dairy of The Seiler Bros.

PURITY! QUALITY! SEILERS' SLOGAN

City Milk Users Should Read This Interesting and Useful Dairy History

That the study of the culture and care of milk to insure the best quality possible is one that requires years to perfect is the statement of the Seiler Brothers, proprietors of the Seiler Brothers' Dairy Farm, located on the State Road two miles beyond the city limits. The Seiler Brothers have made milk a study for the past fifteen years. Their farm and methods are fine examples of what can be accomplished with the proper knowledge of the business.

It can be truly said that Seiler's is a model dairy farm. Just a short stroll some Sunday afternoon through the sanitary barns and over barns and the floor-level pasture land on which the large herd of cows graze will convince the observer that La Crosse has within easy walking distance one of the most complete establishments for the production of milk in the northwest.

Decide on Dairy

The Seiler Brothers formerly farmed with their father on his farm on St. Joseph's Ridge. Some fifteen years ago, following several years spent during their boyhood in ordinary farm work, the young men realized that to excel in farming, they would have to specialize. Their father had always kept a number of cows and had conducted a dairy business in a small way, churning butter and selling cream to the La Crosse market.

The young men looked around them for an opportunity of branching out in the farm business. After discussing different ideas and plans for going into the grain raising business and other farm projects, they decided that the best opening they could find was in the dairy business. This ambition, which had its birth back on the ridge farm, finally grew into a definite plan, and they decided to establish a milk route in La Crosse.

The young men were not satisfied with producing milk in the way that their father had done. Their idea was to produce the best dairy products possible. Their father's farm was a number of miles from the city and a difficult place on which to raise cattle on a large scale.

Find Ideal Farm

The ambition of the sons was realized about ten years ago when a proposition was put before them to obtain the State Road tract. After looking over the ground they decided that it was one of the best locations for the purposes of grazing cattle and raising grain for feed that could be bought in this part of Wisconsin. They purchased the land, and then and there the milk industry in this section of the state began to see the beginning of a revolution that will not end until the best possible product is obtained.

The ground on which the farm is located is as level as a floor practically over the entire tract. It snuggles up close to the huge bluffs that run to the east of the road for miles. The hills afford the most ideal pasture land for the cows that could be found anywhere.

The large quantity of barley and other grains and hay that the Seiler Brothers use for feed is raised altogether on their land. Several years have been consumed in the exhaustive study of the very best feed for their stock.

Alfalfa Big Help

Some time ago the talk of alfalfa that was circulated around the country reached the brothers. A ten acre tract was fenced off and planted. Tests have proven that three and four crops of the hay can be cut every season. Alfalfa only has to be planted once and with the right conditions will last practically forever. The conditions for the raising of this new hay are perfect on the State Road farm. During part of the season the herd is allowed to graze in the alfalfa.

During the summer months the cows are allowed to run at large in the pasture during the daytime. It has been proven that cows will not give the best results in milk unless given the most favorable conditions.

Fifty Cows and Up

At present the Seiler Brothers have fifty cows, although in the winter, their heaviest season, the number is greatly increased to supply their customers.

Selection and Inspection

One of their chief occupations in the milk business since they have had the present location has been the study of the breeding of cows. They have experimented with the different breeds of standard cattle, and have determined that no special breed can be relied upon to give more milk during the entire year than another. The large herd is mixed, no one special breed being used, but each cow is picked out and tested for its milk before it is made a member of the herd.

By law cattle must be inspected by veterinary surgeons annually. The Seiler brothers go further than this and have a veterinary make a call at the farm each month. They find that this insures the milk in every instance against impurities.

The brothers have found out by practical experience just how many months during a year a milch cow can afford a good product, and after this time has passed, the cow is given a rest and put on the best food known.

Seiler Brothers' farm contains one of the largest and most practical silos in this part of the country, holding over 100 tons. Until the storing of silage was put in practice universally, milk during the winter months did not come up to the standard of that in summer months, but the brothers have found that by storing enough silage they can have their milk in the same condition both winter and summer. The green feed that is stored in the summer has the same effect on the cattle in the winter, as if they were grazing on an open pasture.

Cleanliness Insured

During the long winter months the large herd is kept in large clean barns. These barns which are constructed of concrete and wood, are throughout, the last word in cleanliness. The floors and sides of the structure in which the cows are kept are of concrete and are washed twice daily, and are then bedded with clean new straw. At all times of the year are the floors on which the cows are kept, as clean as the floor of a dwelling. This is done to insure the cleanliness of the cattle and the place in which the milking is done. A look at the clean open stalls would convince the most skeptical that no sediment of any kind could reach the milk under these conditions.

Coming to the actual process of milking, the old objection to unsanitary hand milking in open receptacles has been answered. Seiler Brothers, several months ago, did away with the open milk pail and adopted the milking machine.

Farmers living in the vicinity of the Seiler place laughed derisively at the new machines when they were first put on exhibition at the farm. "Cows will never be milked otherwise than by hand," has been the dogma of the milk breeder ever since a milking machine was first discussed.

Not only does the mechanical means do away with the open germ and dust catching milk pail, but the work is done in less than one quarter the time. Also it has been proven by the Seiler Brothers that the new process is easier on the cow than the old hand method.

Milk Never Exposed

Two machines are in operation in the barn at the present time. Each of these machines milks two cows at the same time. Running over the tops of the open stalls, is a pipe that is connected with a large gasoline engine, driving a pump that fills a tank with compressed air. This air is drawn through the pipes to the milking tubes which are placed one on each udder of a cow. An easy sucking motion of small rubber valves has the same effect as the hand.

The milk runs down rubber tubes into air tight milk pails, never reaching the air for a second from the time it leaves the cow, until it is bottled.

This system, which the Seiler Brothers pride themselves upon, absolutely insures against any impurities no matter of how small consequence, reaching the milk.

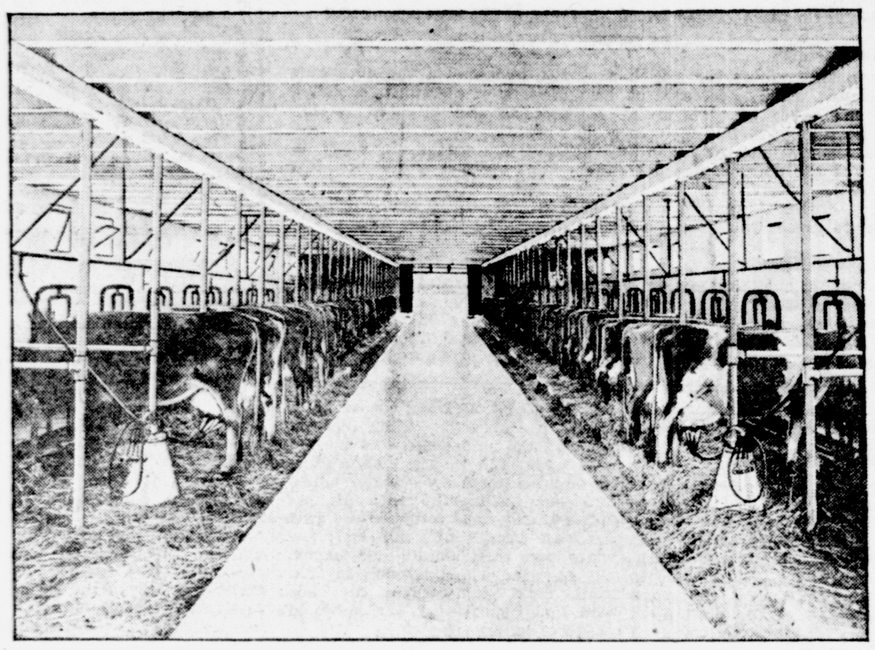

After he is through milking, we will take a trip to the bottling department with the foreman of the barn. Even the good housewife does not fully realize the extreme necessity for cleanliness in this department. The dairyman knows the importance of this part of the process of the milk. The Seiler Brothers have made it a point in their work to have the bottling room spotlessly clean.

The milk is brought into the bottling department in the sealed pails, direct from the cow. It has been strained previously in the pail, as it goes through, and is again strained in the large air tight tank from which the milk is bottled.

The milk is poured into bottles through air-tight syphons. As the bottles are returned to the milkman on his route they are brought to the farm and are thoroughly sterilized.

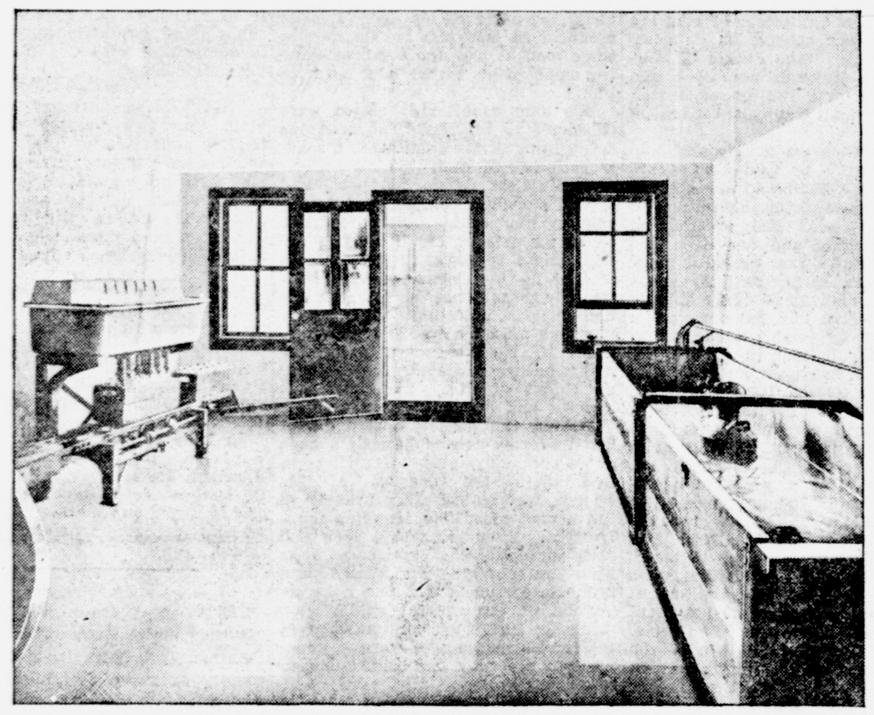

As a whole the process is the most perfect that can be obtained, as cleanliness is the watchword throughout the entire process.

DO YOU WANT IT PURE OR SLANGY?

CHICAGO, Aug. 9.—To determine whether a majority of baseball bugs prefer to read a story of the game, immersed in slathers of slang, or recited in the purest of English, the sporting editor of a Chicago today printed two versions of yesterday's Cub-Phillies combat, and extended Chicago fans an invitation to ballot on their preference. The opening paragraphs line up as follows:

Slang—Stupendous swatting by the invading Phils put the bee on the intermittent Cubbers yesterday. With Alex the Great working slab miracles while three Trojan flingers were floundering about in approved bush league fashion, Skipper Dooin and hsi sprightly toopers made merry with a vengeance, giving Evers and company, the once over at regular and stated intervals.

English—By hitting three Cubs' pitchers to every corner of the field, Philadelphia yesterday defeated the Cubs, 16 to 3, at the West Side park. The trio of tallies represented the compliments of Grover Cleveland Alexander, in Quakertown known as "The Great."

YOUNGSTER HOLDS UP CHILE BANK

Kid in "Sneakers" Sticks Gun Under Cashier's Nose and Escapes with $1,400

NEILSVILLE, Wis., Aug. 9.—Two posses are combing the counties of Wood and Clark today for some traces of a lone bandit who entered the State Bank of Chile late yesterday afternoon, held up the cashier, stuffed $1,400 in currency into his pockets and escaped.

The hold-up was described as a young man of about twenty years of age, wearing a yachting cap, gray coat, dark trousers and no mask. Evidently he wore "sneakers" for the cashier did not hear him as he entered. A slight cough apprised him of the stranger's presence. When he looked up from his books he faced a revolver.

"Get busy and hand me all of your currency," swiftly ordered the young man. "I don't want to be bothered by any of your citizens coming here."

Taking the money, the robber backed out and disappeared in a clump of nearby timber.

Alone Twenty-Four Years.

It was stated at an inquest on a woman at Newington, England, recently that she had been a tenant of Ponsonby buildings, Blackfriars, for 24 years, and the porter said he had never known her to have a visitor. Her sister happened to call, and at her request he burst the door open and found the woman dead. Further evidence showed that the cause of death was bronchitis, and that the woman had been dead for two days.

Little as selenium is known outside the scientific world it is not a rare element. Rather it is widely distributed. A Specimen of Economy.

In the early eighteenth century a wave of economy flooded Britain's civil service. The commissioners of customs, about 1722, were filled with ideas of economical reforms. They restricted their staff to so many reams of paper and a certain number of pens a year. And, more, they put their own house in order. They issued a self denying ordinance to the effect that they would in future buy their own breakfast coffee, pay their own coach hire and purchase their own books and pamphlets, except the "Book of Rates."

LUCK.

Luck is of your own making. Luck means rising at 6 in the morning and living on $1 a day if you can make $2. Luck means the hardships and privations you have not hesitated to endure, the long nights devoted to hard work. Luck means the appointments you have never failed to keep, the train you have never failed to catch. Luck means the trusting in God and your own resources. Luck comes to them who help themselves and know how to wait.—Max O'Rell.

Worldly Advice

"Equivocal advice, that," said Senator Hitchcock, in a tariff argument. "Such advice can be taken in two ways. It's like the advice of Rowndar.

"A youth told Rowndar that he was passionately in love with a parlor maid eleven years his senior.

"'She's all the world to me,' said the youth. 'What would you advice me to do?'

"'See a little more of the world, old chap,' Rowndar replied."

The Lumps' Identity

The whizzing motor car struck a stump, and one of the occupants of the back seat, a lady possessed of considerable embonpoint, executed a neat but not gaudy parabola in the atmosphere and alighted by the roadside like a polypus falling from a shot tower.

"I don't believe I have broken any bones," she stated, in reply to the inquiry of the omnipresent bystander; "but there is a lump on this bank that—"

"Lump—nuthin'!" snarled a smothered voice. "I'm the constable that's goin' to arrest you gosh-durned joyriders, if I live!"—Judge.

"Hello, Giles, deah boy!" exclaimed the other. "So glad to see you. I'm going to London next week. Can I do anything faw you?"

"No, goin's enough, thanks," replied Giles, moving on.—Lippincott's

A Message of Consolation

Parents and relatives of the late Master Kemp Engleman, the accomplished son whose loss has come to grieve Prof. and Mrs. J. O. Engleman found a message of consolation in the following address delivered at the funeral by Rev. D. C. Jones of the First Presbyterian church:

Blessed be God, even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of Mercies, and the God fo all comfort; who comforteth us in all our affection. I Cor. 1:3-4. We realize how feeble any words of man are to comfort and console on an occasion like this. "The Father of Mercies" alone through his word and spirit must give the message that can solace and heal the broken in heart.

God's Comfort in Mystery

The mystery of God's ways are often very perplexing to us with our limited vision and the narrowness of our earthly plans. The plans of God are far-reaching and our lives are subject to God's vast range of plans and purposes. In my Father's house are many mansions—many abiding places, asserted our Saviour when speaking of our earthly abode and of other abodes for man in the vast domain of the heavenly Father. The apostle was puzzled at the ordering of his life by the incarnate Saviour, and the Lord recognized the mystery of that ordering, but did not at that time solve the mystery, but promised that it was not to be always unsolved. "Thou knowest not now but thou shalt know hereafter" "For now we see through a glass darkly but then face to face." In many of God's providential ways clouds and darkness are round about him, but righteousness and judgment are the habitation of His throne. "For we know that all things—the things of light and of darkness, of sorrow and of joy—work together for good to them that love God."

The Mystery of Answered Prayer

It is also befitting that we should be reminded today of one of God's methods of answering prayer. In the life of the Apostle Paul we find that he prayed concerning a certain thing and besought the Lord three times that it might depart from him. The Lord answered his prayer, but not in the way the apostle had hoped and prayed. He who seeth the end from the beginning answered according to his own infinite wisdom and love.

The Lord said to the apostle, I am not going to take away from thee thy present burden but I am going to make it possible for thee to bear it with patience and resignation. "My grace is sufficient for thee: for My strength is made perfect in weakness." The apostle's response came quick and positive, "Most gladly therefore will I glory in my infirmities that the power of Christ may rest upon me." The Lord did not ask the apostle to bear his burden alone. It was with the understanding that the divine grace was to be a sconscious present help that the affliction was to be laid and continued upon him. "God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble." "Call upon me in the day of trouble" saith the Lord "and will answer thee and thou shalt glorify me."

Even the Eternal Son prayed to be delivered from the bitter cup that was approaching Him. In loving obedience to the Father's will he drained the cup; but angels came and ministered unto Him.

The all-wise Father says today as of old, "My grace is sufficient for thee, for my strength is made perfect in weakness."

The Mold of Youth

In a message of consolation very applicable also at this time are the words spoken of old of young Timothy: "And from a child thou hast known the Holy Scriptures which are able to make thee wise unto Salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus." The Scriptures are here said to be the determining factor in the young life precisely in the sense in which they were applied at the first may these words be applied today to our beloved Kemp.

Kemp Engleman born near New Albany, Ind., May 4, 1898, was educated in the public schools and coming to La Crosse with his parents four years ago he entered the model school of the La Crosse state normal, and after two years there entered the high school when thirteen years of age, and was at the time of his death a junior in the high school of this city.

His aptitude and application in his school work had already marked him out for a distinguished career in the world of learning. When but nine years of age he became—we are very sure under the wise guidance of his parents—a member of the church and was transferred with his parents and sister by letter to the Presbyterian church of this city, four years ago this coming September. His knowledge and interest in Bible truth were very evident to those who had opportunity to mark his progress along this line. His becoming a member of the Christian Endeavor society opened up for him a new channel for the expression and development of his religious nature. He was a faithful and loyal endeavorer. His thoughts, his sincerity and his simple faith and reverence in this work impressed me as quite unusual for a lad of his age. I made mention of this fact to his mother some months ago and communicated the same to his father in a letter to him.

His simple religious faith gave character to his life. The religious convictions of his home were strongly reflected in him.

Willingness to do his part, and loving consideration for others especially his parents were marked characteristics of his life. His unwillingness to cause worry to his mother in the absence of his father was one reason that the fatal disease had such a hold upon him before vigorous measure could be taken to check it. He had a humorous side to his nature and could see the funny things of life. His spirit was hopeful and buoyant.

During the desperate struggle of his illness he proved himself a hero of no common mold. Trusting in God, asking the prayers of his friends, yet co-operating bravely in the use of means he fought a manly fight. Everything that love and skill could do was lavished upon him; and not only his family and immediate friends but also a larger portion of the general public were intensely interested and anxious in the fatal struggle of the brave, good-natured boy they had known but to love.

The Hope Beyond

"For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved we have a building of God, a house not made with hands eternal in the heavens." For Him the earthly house of this body is dissolved, and the house not made with hands—the eternal home—has already become a reality. To the dear ones left behind the language of another might be addressed at this time. For Kemp to abide in the flesh would have been more comforting for you, but to depart and be with Christ which is far better is the divine will for him. Here in the world he was his father's son, tender and beloved in the sight of his mother.. His memory will linger long as an inspiring influence not only in his home but in this community and among his young associates in church and school. May we have the promised grace that enables us even though our tears to say "The Lord gave, the Lord hath Taken away, blessed be the name of the Lord." And in the words of the great laureate we offer our humble prayer to Him who gave and took away:

"Forgive our grief for one removed
Thy creature whom we found so fair
We trust he lives in Thee and there
We find him worthier to be loved."

For the present that which is mortal of him is to be laid to rest in a beautiful spot in Oak Grove cemetery and will be borne thither by six of his young companions in the Endeavor society and the high school and followed by his prostrate parents and family and a host of friends. The tributes of love and sympathy that have come from far and near are many and choice, and speak eloquently of the love and esteem that this community and their many friends elsewhere have for this family; and which have been so spontaneously expressed on this occasion.

IN The WORLD OF WOMEN

Chicago women, headed by Dr. Alice M. C. Allen, have organized a Political Equality League branch with the avowed intention of abating the ojectionable features of dance halls and cabarets which were under fire during the recent vice investigation. It is planned to establish rest rooms and social centers where talks will be given on citizenship and voting. The organization is non-partisan.

It is announced that Mme. Curie, of Paris, the famous scientist, who discovered polonium and radium, and who is a native of Warsaw, Poland, is to return to her native city and superintend a radiological laboratory in connection with the Warsaw Society of Science.

Miss Mildred Armour of Evanston, Chicago's wealthy and fashionable suburb, and Miss Carolyn Wooley, of Hartford, both Smith college girls and classmates, have abandoned social joys to go to Battle Harbor, Labrador, and teach kindergarten in a mission and hospital maintained by Dr. William Grenfell.

The Bonnie Home association of Chicago, has planned a series of entertainments to raise funds for the establishment of a home for working women in the suburbs, where weary mothers with their children may secure rest and recreation.

In 1869 seven college girls of the Wesleyan University, of Mount Pleasant, Iowa, organized the P. E. O. sisterhood. Its chapters have spread from one state to 27 states, and its influence from local to national.

The Blue Laws.

The so called blue laws of Connecticut were the invention of one Samuel Peters, a Tory, who, driven from this country on account of his disloyalty during the Revolution, published in London in 1781 a book entitled "General History of Connecticut," in which the laws in question were set forth. The code of laws which this book contains has been proved to be fabrication. There were no such laws in Connecticut or in any other part of New England.—New York American.

The Restless Piper.

A Wall street financier was talking about music. "I like all music," he said, "except such native and special sorts as the tomtom, the bagpipes or the India hufaa give off. Did you ever notice how a piper prances up and down as he pipes? He never sits, he never stands still, but up and down, round and round, to and fro, he struts continually. A little boy, listening to the weird skirl of the bagpipes of a street performer, once said to his father, 'Father, why does the piper keep on the move all the time he plays?' 'I can't say, my boy,' the father answered, 'unless it is to prevent any one getting the range with a cobblestone.'"

Lamb's Unkind Thrust.

Charles Lamb, than whom no gentler or kinder hearted wit ever breathed, at times found it impossible to restrain himself from the personal—as, for instance, when he covered a friend with shame at a whist party by blurting out:

"Gad, James! If—if dirt were t-t-trumps what a hand you would have!"

They Were There.

"Pa," said little Johnny, "do all roses have thorns?"

"Yes, my lad," patronizingly answers father.

"I don't see any thorns on these roses in ma's new hat," continued Johnny.

"You would if you had to pay for the hat!" sadly sighs daddy.

Byron's "First Spring."

Byron worked fast. He once told a publisher that he was like a tiger and if he missed his first spring went "grumbling back to his lair." Many of his works were written at fever heat when the first spring did not miss. "The Corsair" occupied ten days, and two rainy days at Ouchy were sufficient to produce the "Prisoner of Chilton." The "Bride of Abydos," though revised afterward, was at first the work of only four nights, and most of his poems, in fact, were impromptus.

POEMS You Ought To Know

INTRA MUROS

(By Mary C. Gillington)

At last 'tis gone, the fever of the day—
Thank God, there comes an end to everything;
Under the night clouds deepened shadowing,
The noises of the city drift away
Thro' sultry streets and alleys, and the gray
Fogs 'round the great cathedral rise and cling.
I long and long, but no desire will bring
Against my face the keen wind salt with spray.

O, far away, green waves, your voices call;
Your cool lips kiss the wild and weedy shore;
And out upon the sea line sails are brown—
White sea birds, crying, hover—soft shades fall—
Deep waters dimple 'round the dripping oar,
And last rays light the little fishing town.

CHURCH NEWS

Presbyterian Church Has Large Membership

Presbyterians just now make public membership and financial data gathered at their assembly at Atlanta in May. It shows that the large body of the name, Presbyterian North, has the largest membership in its history, and correspondingly great money income. Its membership figures now stand at 1,415,800, a gain of 39,000 last year. This is the greatest gain in any normal year for a generation. Baptisms also reached the large total of nearly 70,000, or considerably more than in any year since there was a Presbyterian church. In number of children in Sunday schools the gain was 33,000, also a record breaking one for recent years. The total number now in Presbyterian schools is 1,265,400, a gain of an even 100,000 in the past five years.

Religious Work at The Panama Expo

The Federal Council of Churches is appointing a national committee to take up religious work at San Francisco in connection with the Panama exposition. Through its influence resolutions relative to the exploitation of commercialized vice at the exposition are now being sent to exposition and San Francisco authorities from Christian bodies in nearly all parts of the country, and the secretary of the council is soon to go to California to assist in a campaign against such vice and to maintain religious meetings during the exposition.

The council is seeking to increase the number of chaplains in the army and navy and reports President Wilson to be in favor of the council's recommendations. Owing to the council's agitation several states have passed laws insuring the industrial workers one day's rest in every seven. New financial support has been secured for the council's commissions on country life and peace and arbitration, and these lines of work are to be increased. Of the former commission Gifford Pinchot has accepted the chairmanship.

Episcopal Laymen To Hold Conference

In the new synod hall of the cathedral of St. John the Divine, New York, built chiefly through the enterprise and generosity of the late J. Pierpont Morgan, Episcopal laymen are to hold a conference during the approaching general convention of their church, and present suggestions for work by Christian laymen of all bodies. Bishop Tuttle of Missouri is to preside, and laymen of San Francisco, Nashville, Louisville, Pittsburg, Buffalo and New York, through committees, will present a statement of conditions necessary for successful work by laymen, and suggestions under five headings.

Crushing a Bore.

Young Borem (back from traveling in Europe)—And so, you see, I didn't take the advice of that fellow who said, "See Naples and die!"

Miss Sharpe (with a yawn)—What a pity!

Hoax—"Why did Mohamet go to the mountain?" Joax—"I suppose he was tired of the shore."

GUNBOAT WINS AND HURLS DEFI

Wants to Fight Any Big Guy Including Johnson, Winner to Take All

NEW YORK, Aug. 9.—Gunboat Smith, teeming with elation over having beaten Fireman Jim Flynn at the Garden Athletic club last night, before a crowd of 10,000, today issued the sweeping defi that he is ready and willing to meet Jack Johnson, Sam Langford "or anyone in the world, for a finish fight," winner to take all.

For the first time in some months, the spectators at a bout here touted as a fast affair, got their money's worth in the matter of action. Smith constantly hammered Flynn with heavy blows, but the fireman kept boring in.

Flynn was floored five times in the fifth round and Referee Joh stopped the fight, giving Smith the bout on a knockout. There was little real science shown by either fighter. Flynn started in to rush things and could not carry it through.

His Opinion.

"It seems to me," ventured the skimpy little Hr. Henpeck, "that Professor Peekhead's article advising men to be very careful in their choice of wives lacks—er—well, verisimilitude, or—ah!—some such word. As far as I have ever known the man had no more to do with choosing his wife than he has with getting his photograph taken—he just keeps still, looks as pleasant as he can and accepts whatever is given him."—Judge.

Wild Rice a Valuable Food.

Wild rice, according to a consular report, is "the most nutritious cereal in America." The plant has a long black grain, and hence is sometimes called black rice. It has been used from time immemorial by certain Indian tribes as their principal food. In recent years it has come into the white man's markets, selling for considerably more than ordinary white rice.

Control.

I would have nobody to control me; I would be absolute; and who but I? Now, he that is absolute can do what he likes; he that can do what he likes can take his pleasure; he that can take his pleasure can be content; and he that can be content has no more to desire. So the matter's over; and come what will come, I am satisfied. —Cervantes.

Between Two Loves.

An Atchison young man who owns a motor car and has been courting a girl several years has decided he can't afford to keep a car and a wife both—and up to the hour the Globe went to press he had taken no steps to dispose of his car.

Weeps.

"Oh, Julia!" cried the sentimental youth, "never weep before my eyes! I am sure that the first time I see you weep my despair will kill me." "And the second time?" coolly inquired Julia.

GAME CALLED ON ACCOUNT OF RAIN

La Crosse and Superior to Battle in Doubleheader at League Park on Sunday

$10,000 PITCHER TO BE ON SLAB

Rube Schauer, Giants' Big Find, to Hurl; Weigent's Ankle Better and May Get Into Game

Threatening weather yesterday caused the postponement of the opening of hostilities between the Superior and La Crosse baseball clubs and immediately after the calling off of the battle it was announced that the contest would be played off Sunday afternoon as part of a double header. As a result of the inclement weather local fans will be treated to the first bargain day attraction of the season tomorrow afternoon.

The Colts took advantage of the hiloday by working out at the park until they were forced to abandon practice by the rain. For some time several men were kept busy hitting grounders to the infielders and flies to the outfielders and a lot of pepper was displayed by the athletes who handled most of the chances faultlessly.

Those who attend Sunday's double header will have a chance to see Rube Schauer, the pitcher for whom the New York Giants paid $10,000, in action as he is slated to toe the slab in one of the battles. Schauer has been hurling splendid ball all season as a result of which the Giants paid what is considered a high price for him in spite of the fact that promising ball players are expensive now. Moppy Anderson will pitch one of the Sunday's games.

Team Full of "Pep"

Although the Colts have lost two out of the three games played since the team came here, the boys are by no means discouraged and are determined to trim the Superior bunch and win the series. The local club has been playing under a handicap as several of the players are out of the game because of injuries but at that the Colts have been putting up a game battle. With the injured men back in the lineup the local club will be ready to make trouble for the best teams in the league and when the nine is again intact it will bear watching and the local fans will be treated to some great exhibitions of the national pastime.

Charlie Weigent's injured ankle is improving rapidly and he has hopes of getting back in the game early next week when he will be placed at shortstop and all the local fans know the ability of this La Crosse boy who was one of the stars of last year's club. He will greatly strengthen the infield and his work will be a big help to the locals. Breckenridge, the star outfielder who has been out of the game for some time, will also in all probability be back in the lineup some time next week and his presence will help the outfield.

When these men are ready to get back in the game, DeRusha, whose regular position is at first base, will probably go back to the initial corner when Manager Lizzette will be enabled to take his turn behind the bat. It is likely too that Thomas will be placed in the outfield then also as that is his regular position although he has been playing shortstop acceptably in the absence of the regular. Thomas is handicapped somewhat in playing at shortstop as he is a left handed thrower and it is difficult for a southpaw to play this position.

It is likely that Kramer will appear on the slab in today's game and Sutton, who twirled a wonderful game Thursday, may oppose Superior in one of the Sunday battles.

BIRMINGHAM ON JOB

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9.—Manager Birmingham of the Naps will once again become a playing manager, resuming his former position in center field today. Leibold's poor work in the middle garden is the cause of the change.

Watching The Scoreboard

When the Cincinnati Reds became too familiar with Tesreau's curves in the sixth inning Al Demaree was forced to throw out his record of eight straight victories to be shot at. Hoblitzel winged it with a home run in the ninth which drove in a man ahead of him. This reduced the Giants' lead to six games as the Phillies had a wild time in Chicago. They scored sixteen runs, and drove out 15 hits including three home runs, a triple and two doubles. Luderus connected for two homers.

Adams had the Boston Braves knocking them in the air and the Pirate outfielders had sixteen putouts. First Baseman Miller had two putouts both in the eighth inning.

Doak had the best of a pitching argument with Walker and the Cardinals shut out the Dodgers with three hits against five collected off Doak. One of the Cardinals' hits was a home run drive by Wingo.

Maisel, the Yankee's $12,000 third baseman, is billed to appear today, and will have to step lively to keep pace with the Texas league recruits now in the line-up. Recruit Williams hit safely three times and stole one base against St. Louis.

The Cleveland Naps continue to have the hard luck of losing when the Athletics are trimmed. They were up against Walter Johnson yesterday and consequently failed to get on the Mackmen when the latter fell before the White Sox.

DULUTH CREW WINS

BOSTON, Mass., Aug. 9—Duluth's four-oared crew easily won the race in the national regatta after one false start was made, due to the metropolitan crew dashing out of its course and striking the Duluth shell. The metropolitan four was second, with third. Time 7:59. Water conditions were ideal.

It's pretty hot, but rejoice that you aren't out playing a shocking accompaniment to a selfbinder.

Bashful.

A buxom farm lass was recently called as a witness in a case in a Yorkshire (Eng.) county court. The girl happened to mention that her sweetheart knew something about the matter. "Oh," said the judge, "then I think we had better call him to court!" The girl blushed furiously. "It won't be any good, sir," she protested. "Ah'm fair put to it to get him to court when we're alone, an Ah'm sure he won't do it before all you gentlemen!"

To Clean the Soles of Shoes.

Get your druggist to make a solution of orange shellac and alcohol, and with a small brush apply this carefully to the heels and soles of your white shoes whenever the latter are polished. It leaves a satiny finish, and a ten-cent bottle has lasted considerably over a year.—Woman's Home Companion.

MORRIS' HAND IN LABOR'S BATTLE

Lietenant Governor and Speaker Hull Make Platform Pledge Good Despite Veto

MADISON, Wis., Aug. 9.—In spite of the veto by Gov. McGovern of the Scott bill providing for a legislative investigation of the subjects of sickness, invalidity and occupational diseases a probe will be conducted by a special legislative committee, the expense to be borne by the individual members. The investgation of the subject is a republican platform pledge. Early in the session a resolution was passed for a committee of eight, five from the assembly and three from the senate, to investigate the subject. When the bill carrying the financial appropriation for paying the expense of the investigation reached the governor he vetoed it, claiming that the work could be done by the industrial commission and state board of health. The state federation of labor urged the investigation and it has been decided by Speaker Hull and Lieutenant Governor Morris to make the appointments. The senate side will be represented by Senators Hoyt, Richards and Zophy. The assembly will be represented by Assemblymen Rosa or Sharp, Rhea, Holmes, Jacob Dietrich. The committee will report to the next legislature.
